4 offers

in 7 days

(after 2 weeks of nothing)

02

I had to leave my company. I got 1 month.

1

15 days

last working days

2

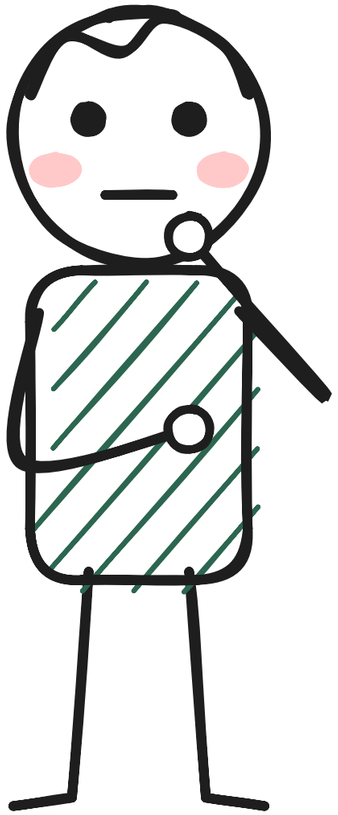

15 days

to find a new job

03

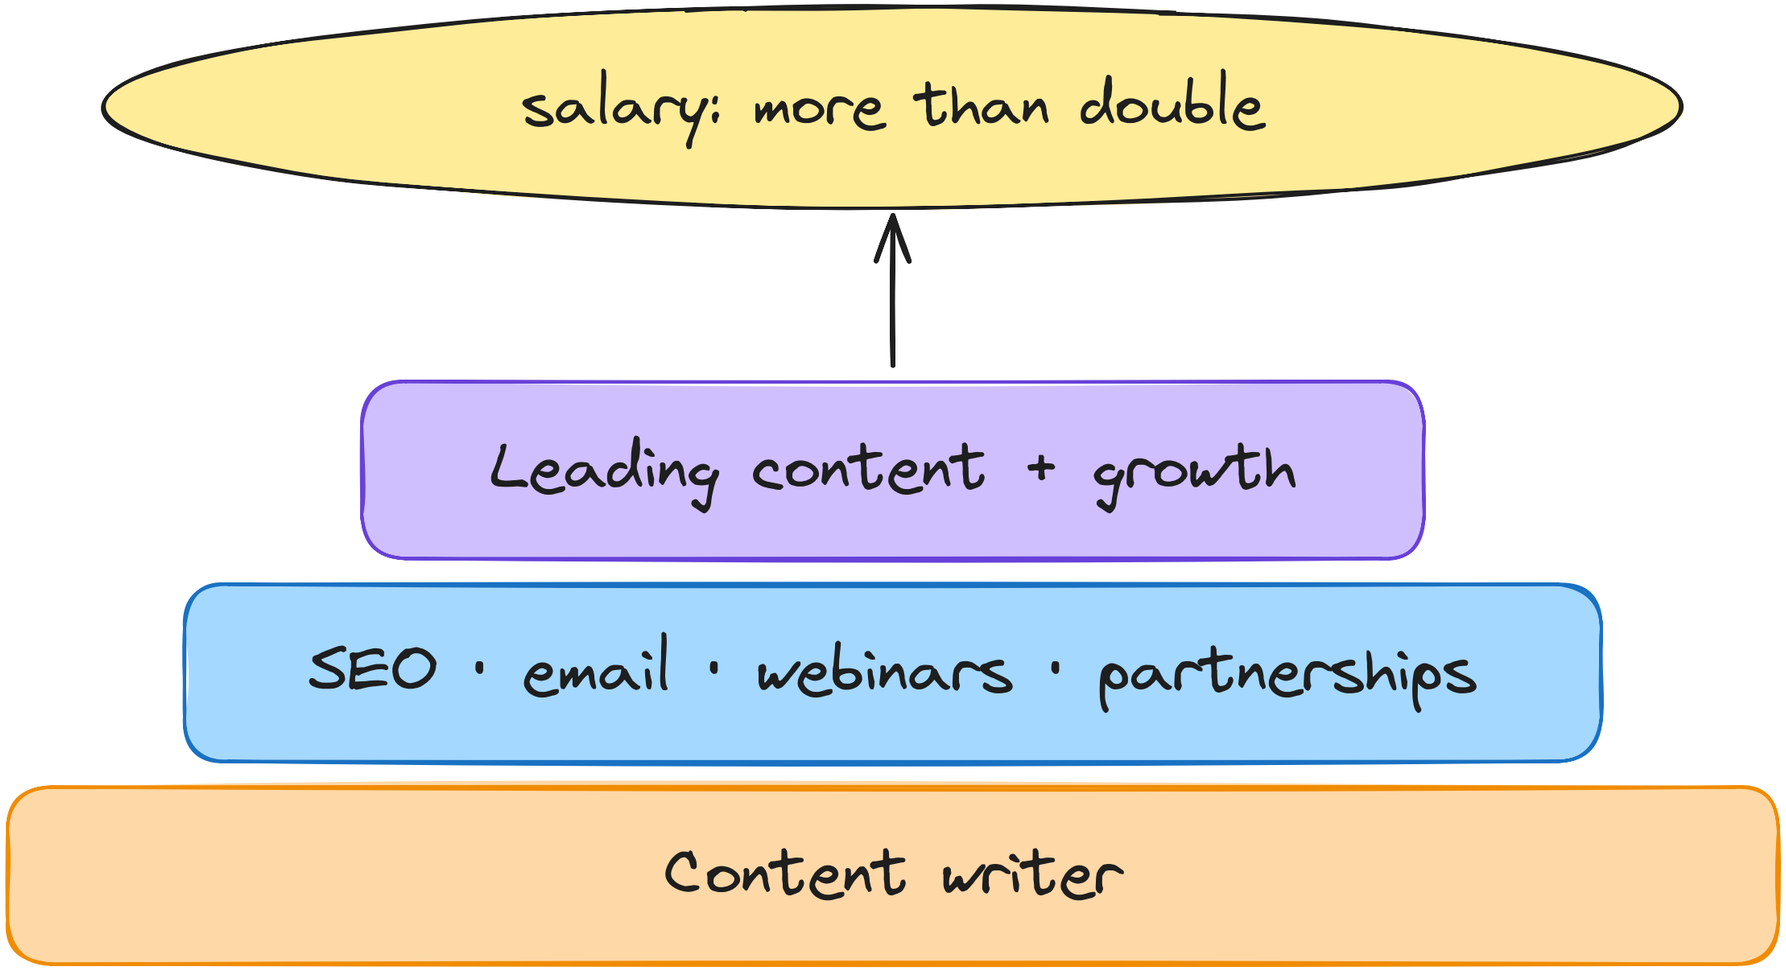

No job hunt in almost 4 years

Before this, I was freelancing.
And the market? Not great.

04

3.5 years at one company

And that's exactly what made it scary

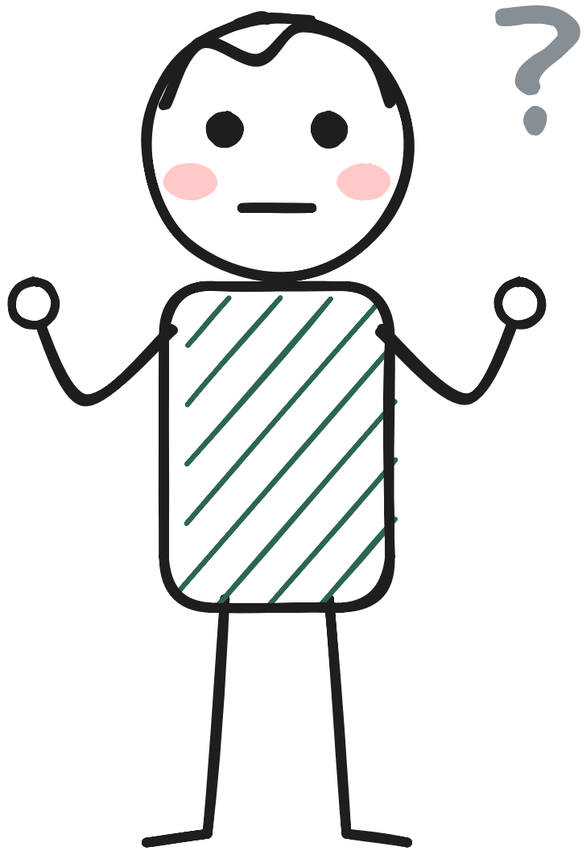

Are senior roles even open?

Will a new company trust me the same?

I'd have to prove it from day one

After 3.5 years, I felt like I knew nothing

(imposter syndrome is real)

Weeks 1–2: nothing worked

1

LinkedIn Easy Apply

200–400 applicants per post

2

Messaging people

nobody even opened my profile

3

My first interview

the founder rejected me

On LinkedIn Jobs,
your resume is just a number

400

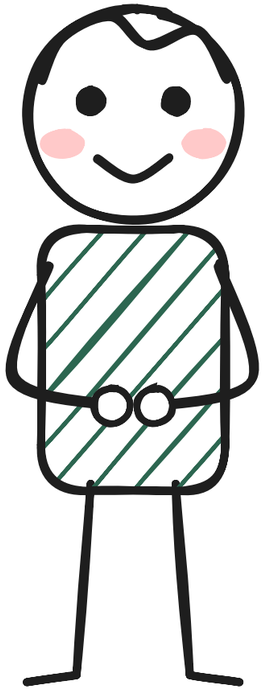

applicants on a job
posted 2 days ago

My first interview: a very nice rejection

the founder said:

You're good, but not there yet. Learn GTM. Come back in a month or two.

Lesson 1: be patient

2 weeks of nothing is normal. Don't stop there.

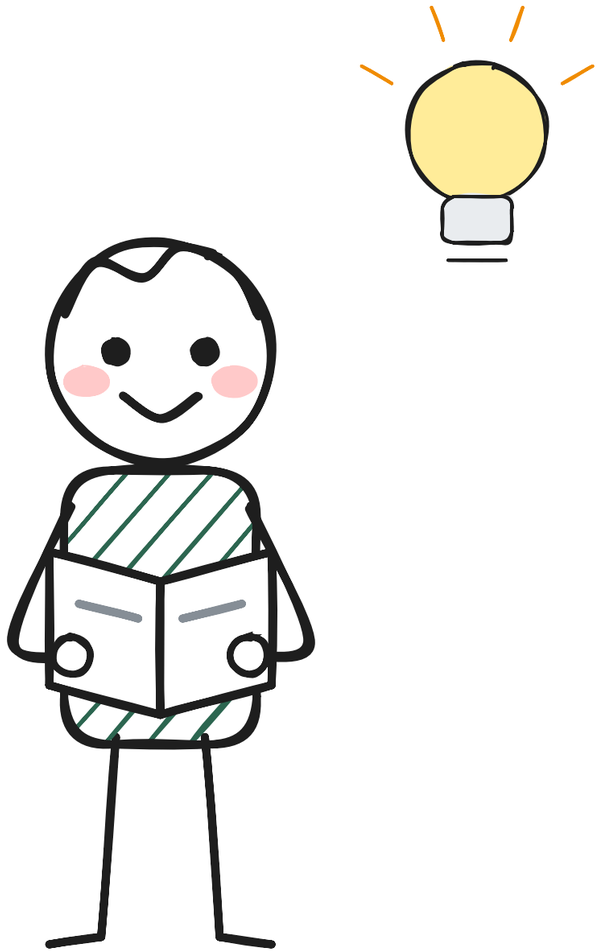

What changed it: I built a portfolio

3.5 years, written down

I hadn't lost
my skills.
I'd just forgotten
what I had done.

The 7 things I changed

1. Posted on LinkedIn
2. Referrals
3. A resume for every job
4. Only fresh jobs
5. Recently funded companies
6. Happenstance
7. Extra work for one job

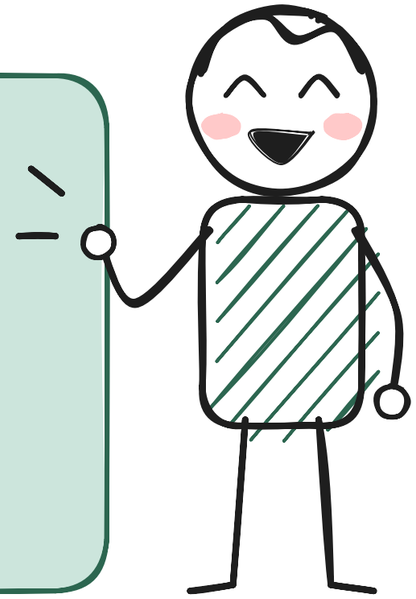

1

Post that you're looking

What I did in 4 years + I'm looking for a change + portfolio link.

result:

A couple of inbound leads.
Decent for one post.

2

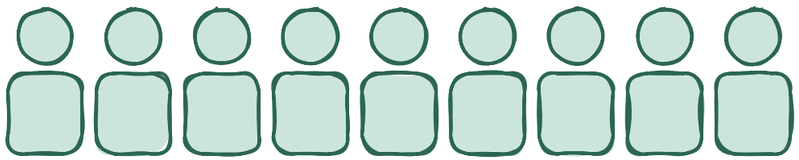

Referrals

(a friend + my ex-founder shared it)

People who know your work beat any job portal.

2 of 4

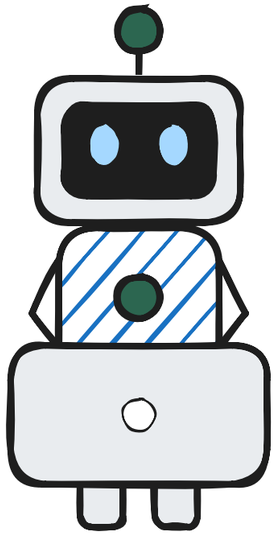

offers came from referrals

3

A new resume for every job

Same experience. What that company cares about comes first.

job description →  → resume for this role

my Claude project

4

Only jobs posted in the last hour

3 times a day.

1

Past 24 hours

you're applicant number 400

2

Past 1 hour

you're one of the first 10

5

Reach out to recently funded companies

They usually start hiring.

result:

Interviews. Some replied after I'd already joined my new job.

6

Happenstance: who you already know

A friend in HR moved my application faster. Then I got rejected.

the catch:

A warm connection makes it fast.
You still need to fit the role.

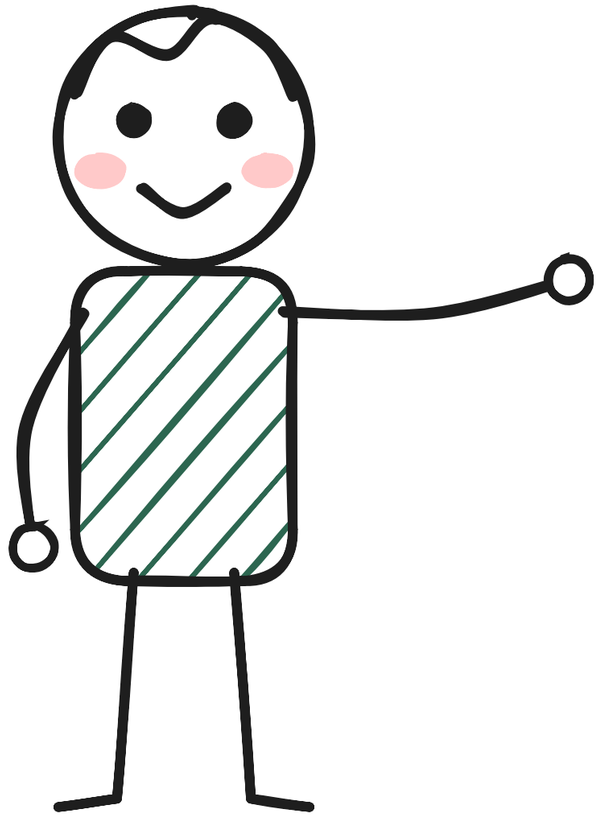

7

For the one job I really wanted, I did extra work

1. Reached out to the founder
2. Suggestions doc
3. 90-day plan
4. Resume for this role

Don't only apply.
Show them what you'd actually do.

(they flew me to Bangalore.
I got the offer.)

The thing I didn't plan for: being on camera

21,000

views, with ~200 followers

It came up in almost every interview

1

A client

2 months of freelance work

2

Bangalore

a video was part of the process

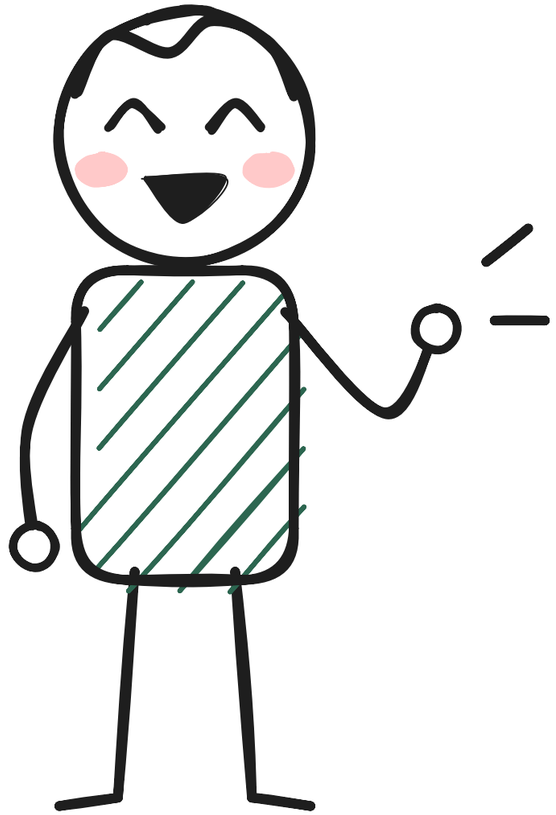

3

My current job

hired for webinars + video

Be the face of the company

Companies want it. Most people don't want to do it. That's your edge.

The last week: 8–10 interviews, 4 offers

1

Referral

a friend

2

Referral

my ex-founder

3

Bangalore

direct to founder + 90-day plan

4

The first company

the one that rejected me

Saying no was the hard part

1

Bangalore

said no, after all they did for me

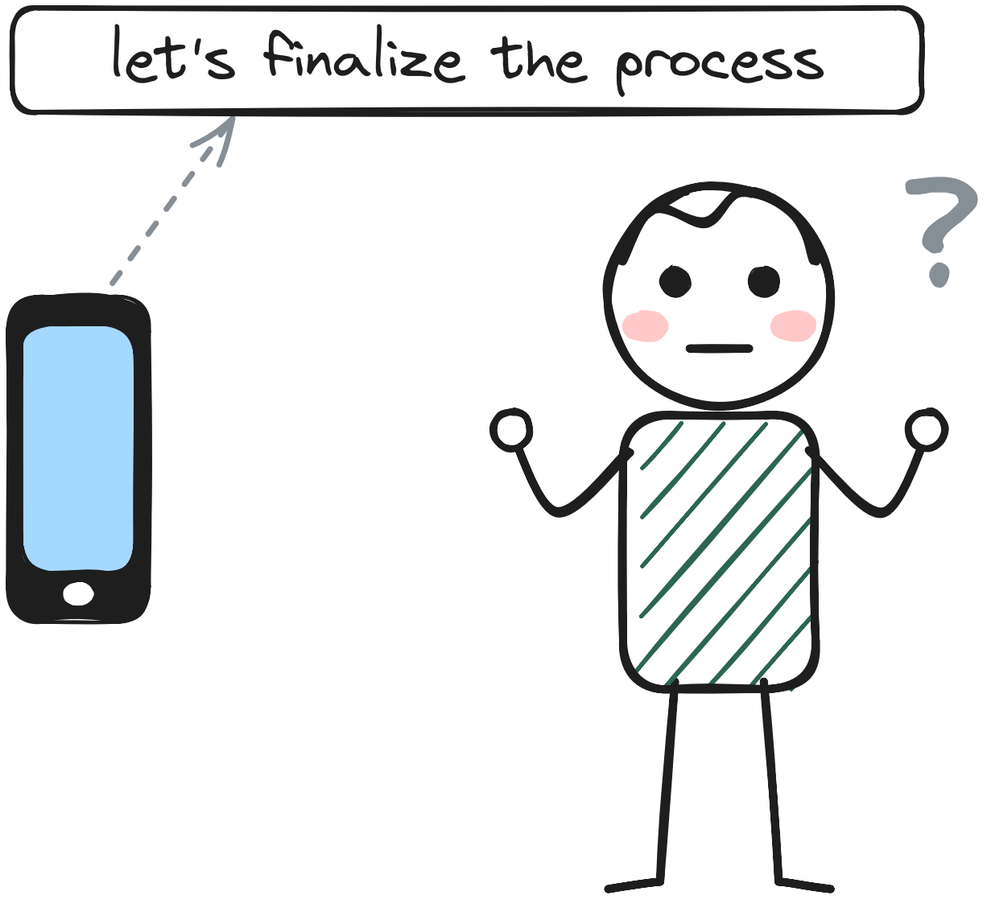

2

Surat: 3 offers

picked the one with the best exposure + work

15 days later, HR called me back

By then, I'd already said yes somewhere else.

If you're going through this right now

1

Be patient

my first 2 weeks were zero

2

Tell people you're looking half my offers came from referrals

3

Write down what you've done

it fixed my imposter syndrome
